WASHINGTON CRITIC

WASHINGTON, OUTOBER 25, 1887. BRINGING UP."

- It isn't all in "bringing up,"
 Let folks say what they will;
 If silver secur a power cup—
 It will be pewter still.
 Fen of old Submon,
 Who sold; "Train up a child,"
 If nistake not bad a wild.
 Proved rattle-brained and wild.
- A man of mark who fain would pass For lord of sea and land. For lord of sea and land, May have the training of a son, And bring him up full grand; May give him all the wealth of lore, Of college and of school; Set, after all, make him no more Than just a decent fool,
- Another raised by penury,
 Upon his bitter bread,
 Whose road to knowledge is like that
 That the good to Heaven must fread;
 He's got a spark of Nature's light,
 He'll fan it to a flame,
 Till in its burning jetters bright
 The world may read bis name,
- If it were all in "bringing up,"
 In counsel and restraint,
 Some rescals had been honest men,
 I'd been myself a sale.
 Oh, it isn't all in "bringing up,"
 Let folks any what they will;
 Neglect may dim a silver cup—
 It will be silver still.

SAVED BY A KISS.

Elma Griffin, died April 15, 1849, aged 19 years, 4 months and 6 days. The words were engraved upon a silver plate, but there was no coffin under them. Mrs. Purroy, an elderly lady, visiting friends living on Clinton avenue, Alameda, but whose home is in Brooklyn, N. Y., looked with an air of mingled pride and reverence upon the carving, for her name was once Elma Griffin and the coffin was made "On my nineteenth birthday," she said, "my mother invited a number of nequalitances to our house to celebrate the day. We lived some distance out side of Williamsburg, as it was then, and the ground was a little soft and boggy. One of the party remembered this when starting home with her brother, and she laughingly congratulated me on being housed already and having no occasion to brave the swamp. I was a wild young girl in those days, and I declarated at once that I would go with them and return alone. Everybody present tried to dissuade me except the girl's brother. We started, and when we reached my friend's house I was consclous that my feet were quite wet, and that a disagreeable child had crept over me, but I declined an invitation to go in, and went away at once. Of course Rob—the brother, I mean—came with me, and somehow I forgot the cold and damp as I walked home.

"I think we must have talked for a long time as we stood on my uncle's doorstep, for suddenly Rob—my escort, I mean—said: Elma, your face is very pale. Have I kept you standing here too long?" He talked to me for ten minutes after that, and then wished me good night and left me. I rang the bell, and when my mother opened the door I told her what I might have known an hour sooner, if I had given it a thought, that I was really Ili. She hurried me to bed immediately, and when she came to call me the following morning she looked very anxious. By noon I was delificus, but I could hear the doctor tell my mother I had typhold fever, and that he could not hold out much hope for my recovery. I knew that my mother was weeping, but I was always a selfish girl, and I could only cry out: 'Robert! Where is Robert,' and they told me, hardly thinking that I heard them that Robert had been suddenly called upon to start for California early that morning and had not even heard of my Illness. He sent a letter to me. however, but I did not see it until many weeks later.

however, but I did not see it until many weeks later.

"I grew rapidly worse and gradually the knowledge of all outward things passed from me. I fancy that I had a certain consciousness, but not of matters around me. I was in another state of being, in which the person speaking—always strangely speaking—was myself, and yet not myself. Then came an utter blank, from which I awoke, after nearly three weeks of oblivion, to see my mother and the doctor standing by my bedside. The doctor said the crisis was past and I should probably recover, but I did not feel any interest in what he was talking about.

"Presently I heard my mather's volce, and I knew that she was speaking to my counts Mary, who was staying in the house with us.

"Poor Elms, she said. I was sosure that God would spare her to me. She struggled through that dreadful illness only to die quietly in her sleep at last. It is very hard, Mary."

"I have often wondered since that did not really die of the reactions and a content of the traction of the counts of the reaction of the counts of the traction."

I tried to ask her why she was grieving, but I could not move or speak. The trance was upon me. I was sensitive, however, and knew that I was lying upon a hard substance and not upon the comfortable mattress of my bed. I could feel, too, very little covering over me, and, despite my eyelids being down, the gloomy darkness of the room could be detected. "Where in the world have they carried me to?" I thought.

"Presently I heard my mother's voice, and I knew that she was speaking to my cousin Mary, who was staying in the house with us.

"Poor Elma, 'she said. I was so sure that God would spare her to me. She struggled through that dreafful liness only to die quietly in her sleep at last. It is very hard, Mary.

"I have often wondered since that I did not really die of horror at that moment, as I realized like a lightning flash that they thought I was dead and had put me in my coffin. They were going to bury me. I strove hard to speak, but the sphinx was not more dumb than I. I tried to sitr, but the rock of Gibraitar might have moved as easily. Must my life be smothered out in a grave for want of a little speech or action now? I thought.

"'It is hard, indeed, dear aunt, 'replied Mary, 'but His will be done. You must arouse yourself. The undertaker will close the coille in a few minutes. Do you think Robert—Mr. Purroy—will be here:"

"I heard a knock at the bedroom dear. Was it Robert? No, it was enly the undertaker.

"May I close it now, ladles?" he asked in professionally mournful but very businesslike tones.

"Nobody but myself knew that my heart was beating, and even I hardly knew it as the undertaker spoke. A second afterward it seemed to me that it throbbed loudly enough for everybody to hear it, for somebody rang the door bell and I knew as well that it was Robert as though my sealed eyes could have looked through brick and wood and mortar to see him standing outside. Softly and quietly he entered the room; gravely and calmly he asked my mother and my cousin to leave him for a few minutes alone with his dead. He closed the door after they had gone out, and stooping over the coffin, gently kissed me. Then he started, I heard the quick, nervous movement, and I knew that I was saved.

"He hastily called my mother, and the doctor was quickly summoned. He saw at once that life was not extinct, though he had been just as positive four days earlier that I was quite dead.

"My bushand declares that an old woman may say it now—that I blushed and smiled when he kissed me. At all events I lived to marry him, and he would not part with that silver coffinplate for ten times its weight in gold."

The machinery of the law cannot be put at work too specifily or too vigorously against the wholesale adulteration of the things we cat. Both the health and the peckets of the people demand protection.

There is no article of food in general use more wickedly adulterated than the lower grades of baking powder.

For raising bread, biscuit or other food only the very best and purest baking powder should be employed. The use of the ordinary cream of tartar, or of baking powders containing lime, alum and phosphates, carries deleterious ingredients into the food to the prejudice of the life and health of the consumer.

The sale of adulterated baking powders has been prohibited by statute in several localities. It will be in the interests of the public health when their sale is made a misdemeaner everywhere, and the penalties of the law are rigidly enforced.

The ordinary baking powder contains either lime, which, introduced into the system in too free quantities, causes serious disorders of the kidneys; alum, a corrosive poison, or lime phosphates, which are condemned by physicians as deleterious in their effect when taken under certain physical conditions. The Royal is the only baking powder on the market that is free from lime, alum and phosphates, and absolutely pure.

The absolute purity of the Royal Baking Powder makes it pre-eminently the most useful and wholesome leavening agent known. Containing no lime, alum, phosphate or other impurity, it leaves no alkaline or other residuum in the food, and its use always insures pure, light and sweet bread, biscuit and cake, that are perfectly digestible and wholesome whether hot or cold, fresh or stale. Its leavening power has been determined the highest whenever tested by official authority, and all chemists and writers on food bygiene commend it for its sterling qualities.
